I. INTRODUCTION

1. Background

In May 1985 the Minister of Justice tabled The Divorce and Corollary Relief Act in The House of Commons, an Act to amend the Divorce Act. The proposed amendments to the new act require family lawyers to ask their clients about the possibility of either reconciliation or divorce mediation, and to inform clients of available reconciliation and mediation services. This inventory will provide for family lawyers a tool to assist them in advising their clients of available services. The inventory lists mediators by province, giving local addresses and telephone numbers, along with some information about the services available, in alphabetical order of cities and towns. This national inventory will assist lawyers in developing lists which are more local in focus as demanded by their particular clientele. It is hoped that in this way a great deal of effort will be spared to lawyers, social services agencies and other users in local areas across the country in their efforts to compile lists of reconciliation and mediation services.

2. Methodology

The process of compiling this inventory began in 1984. A preliminary inventory was compiled and published in a 1985 Department of Justice Report: A Profile of Divorce Mediation and Reconciliation Services in Canada. As a second stage of the data gathering process, this report was widely distributed along with questionnaires soliciting additional mediation and reconciliation services for inclusion in the expanded and updated inventory. Responses to the questionnaires and notices updating information were accepted during 1986 and during the first two months of 1987.

The second stage of data collection produced an inventory including 686 mediation and reconciliation counselling services in Canada. The preliminary inventory published in 1986 contained 307 agencies. The approximately 150 percent increase provides some confidence that this inventory is a reasonably comprehensive one, although several caveats should be drawn to the attention of the user. Since there are no entry requirements on licensing procedures in order to practice mediation or reconciliation counselling, this area of service provision may be a relatively fluid one. Agencies may become established or cease to operate with great frequency. Second, the inventory represents only those services for which individuals were aware of and chose to respond to the questionnaires. The owners or managers of some agencies may not have responded to the questionnaire for a variety of reasons, even though the Department of Justice attempted to make certain that knowledge about this inventory was widely known among the mediation and reconciliation counselling profession.

No element of legitimacy or approval of any sort whatever is implied by inclusion in this inventory. Since there are currently no official standards for the training of persons providing mediation or reconciliation, nor are there entrance requirements or licensing standards, no discrimination or selectivity was exercised in compiling the inventory. The inventory represents only those individuals and agencies who were willing and/or able to respond to attempts to include them in this report.

II. SELECTED CHARACTERISTICS OF MEDIATION AND RECONCILIATION SERVICES

This section presents a brief description of some characteristics of the services included in the inventory. The figures are based on 686 cases, fewer than included in the inventory because the questionnaires which arrived near the deadline for inclusion in the inventory were too late to be included in the data analysis.

1. Distribution of Divorce Mediation and Reconciliation Counselling Services

Data were gathered from a total of 686 respondent services in Canada; 365 represent private practices, 118 law offices, 81 government services, 58 non-profit community agencies, 34 other agencies (i.e. notaries), 17 family courts, 7 other court based services, and 6 which did not indicate the nature of the organization. It should be noted that the category of private practice also includes some lawyers. Only those indicating their practice within a law office were included in that category.

In terms of geographic distribution of respondent services, the data show that the greatest number of respondents were from Ontario, 37.8%; followed by Quebec with 25.9%; British Columbia, 21.4%; and Alberta 5.8%. For the remaining provinces, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, and the Northwest Territories, the response rate ranged from 0.15% to 2.6%.

2. Types of Services Provided and Distribution of Service Providers

Respondents were asked to indicate the type of service they provided. Of the 686 respondent services, 88% offered divorce mediation as a sole service or in combination with reconciliation or some other related counselling. Within this group, 33.8% provided only divorce mediation, 33.4% provided divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling along with other services*, 6.7% offered a combination of divorce mediation and other services. Among those providing divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services, 4.6% offered reconciliation counselling only and 6.2% provided reconciliation counselling as well as other services. Services other than those restricted to divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling were offered by 3.5% (24) of the respondents.

Once again, if one considers those respondent agencies offering divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services, the data demonstrate that 358 (54.3%) are private practitioners, 112 (17.3%) law offices, 78 (12.0%) government services, 50 (7.7%) non-profit community agencies, 9 (1.4%) family courts, 7 (1.0%) other court based services, and 33 (5.1%) make up other services. These data indicate that more than half of the service providers are in the private sector, with law offices and private practitioners representing 72.6% of the total.

*Other Services: This category includes family counselling, court ordered assessments, various kinds of counselling, crisis counselling, marital therapy, separation counselling, legal advice, psychotherapy, children's counselling, referral services, individual counselling.

3. Range of Mediation Services

Table 3 illustrates that among those respondent groups providing mediation services; private agencies offer the greatest range of divorce mediation services. Slightly more than half, 51.9%, offered all four types of divorce mediation - custody, access, maintenance, and marital property, 32% provided custody, access and maintenance, and 5% offered only custody and access services.

Non-Profit agencies also provided a varied range of divorce mediation services with 49% offering all four types of mediation services and 41% providing only custody and access.

The low representation of law offices in providing divorce mediation services is in part explained by the fact that many lawyers appear in the private practice category. As well, the involvement of lawyers in divorce mediation is a relatively recent development.

4. Fee Structure

Private practitioners represent the largest group of respondents providing divorce mediation and reconciliation services. Among this group the largest percentage were represented in the $41.00 - $60.00 per hour fee range for both divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services. The lowest fee charged for both divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services was less than $20.00 per hour. For a detailed breakdown of the fee structure, see Table 4.

Among the respondent agencies providing mediation and reconciliation services, a small percentage (16.8%) charge no fees for divorce mediation and an even smaller percentage (5.8%) have no fees for reconciliation services. As might be expected, government services, family courts, and other court-based services are the groups most likely not to charge fees.

Among those respondent agencies providing information relating to the hourly fee charged for mediation and/or reconciliation counselling services; the highest fee charged was more than $100.00 per hour. The group most represented in this fee category are law offices/lawyers.

Respondents were asked to indicate if reduced fees are provided to clients. Of the total 559 respondents, 64.4% indicated that they offer reduced fees. Among those respondent services indicating that they provided reduced fees, such fees were provided on a discretionary basis in 65.5% of cases. About 30% reported having a non-discretionary geared-to-income fee structure.

5. Financial Subsidization

A total of 638 respondents provided information relating to whether or not they are receiving financial subsidies in the provision of divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services. Among respondents, 90% indicated receiving no financial subsidies. Among the ten percent of respondent agencies who indicated receiving financial subsidies, 72.1% of these represent non-profit community agencies (see Table 5 for a further breakdown).

Among those respondents who indicated that they are receiving financial subsidies, the three most prevalent sources of subsidies appear to be provincial government grants, United Way funding, and municipal government grants.

III. INVENTORY OF DIVORCE MEDIATION AND RECONCILIATION COUNSELLING SERVICES IN CANADA

The inventory which follows lists divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services by province, respondent categories, and in alphabetical order by respondent name, cities, and towns. Each listing provides some basic information* concerning the service, such as, type of service, range of mediation services, special services (if applicable) and cost of divorce mediation and/or reconciliation counselling services.

*Those listings which provide little or no information represent those respondents who wished either not to have information listed or to have limited information listed in the inventory.

This national inventory, while it must be emphasized is not an exhaustive or complete listing of divorce mediation and reconciliation counselling services in Canada, will provide a variety of groups (including family lawyers, physicians, social workers, community and social service agencies, government agencies, and psychologists), with a tool to assist them in advising clients of available services.
